

The Orange Show is considered one of the finest examples of environmental folk art in the United States. It is one man's dream made wonderfully real in concrete, tile and brick. Jeff McKissack, a Houston postman, dedicated 25 years of his life to the creation of this monument to the orange. The Foundation was created five years ago, after McKissack's death, to preserve, maintain and establish The Orange Show as a cultural and educational resource for the City of Houston.
