THE ORANGE SHOW is the delightful result of one man's 25-year obsession with the orange. Jeff McKissack, a postman, built this multi-level structure of found objects. He hoped to inspire others to follow his philosophy of good health through nutrition and hard work. The Orange Show is considered one of Houston's most unique landmarks, and one of the finest examples of environmental folk art in the country.

Today, The Orange Show is owned and operated by a non-profit foundation, open to the public weekends from March to December.

The Show closes for the winter December 15th, and will open with a special Sesquicentennial exhibit March 16, 1986. For more information, please call 552-1767.
