To me the people who work tirelessly in this field (without always being recognized as part of it) to preserve and protect non or less commercial sites are unsung heroes. I hope there comes a time when these creative minds come together to figure out ways of more global and universal exposure to the public of these sites and potential and interesting ways of involvement including a more widespread utilization of people already in the field....like dealers, collectors, the magazines out there etc. The yardshows and environments are the bass and drums that keep the pulse of this field ultimately authentic and on track.

Again these are sites of vital importance to human creative ecology and give Wade Davis' term 'ethnosphere' an even greater validity..

Pasaquan is listed on The National Register of Historic Places

Buena Vista, GA -- W. Ray Luce, Division Director and Deputy State Historic Preservation Officer for the Historic Preservation Division of the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, has announced that Pasaquan, the famous visionary art site located in Marion County, GA, has been nationally recognized as architecturally and
